Dr. Chambers returned to higher education after spending seven years managing the Chambers' family farm near Mt. Vernon, Ohio. During the initial half of the 20th Century, M. M. Chambers worked at Purdue, Oregon State University, the University of North Dakota, the Brookings Institution, and the American Council on Education. Beginning in 1958 with a call from Algo Henderson inviting Dr. Chambers to the newly formed Center for the Study of Higher Education at the University of Michigan, he spent four years at Michigan, one year in East Lansing directing a state higher education organization, five years at Indiana University as a Professor of Higher Education, and then seventeen years at Illinois State University as Professor of Educational Administration and Editor of GRAPEVINE.

In my view, Illinois State University held a special place in M. M. Chambers' life despite his frequent pronouncements about bureaucracy, inefficiency, and institutional policies which inhibited, rather than facilitated, students moving ahead with their education. These pronouncements were given more as a commentary about how things should be rather than as any specific criticism of Illinois State University. Five years before he came to Illinois State, Dr. Chambers remarked:

To me it also seems fortunate that most of the normal schools, apparently established on the strange theory that the education of school teachers had no place in a university, have become 'state colleges' with divisions of arts and sciences, business, home economics, etc., and with some departments offering masters' degrees. I am not too shocked to observe that several of them are called 'universities' and some are now or will soon be offering a few doctoral degrees (Letter to President Hancher, March, 1964).

M. M. Chambers was enthusiastic about relocating from Indiana to Illinois State, as indicated below:

One of my pet enthusiasms is for the type of developing multi-purpose state university that has exploded the chrysalis of the teachers college, with all its implicit limitations, and is swiftly becoming a real comprehensive and cosmopolitan university. Illinois State seems to me to be one of the very best examples of that type (Letter to Richard Bond, June, 1967).

Dear Dr. Chambers:

I am trying to get some information relative to the organization of higher education in some of the mid-western states. Indiana has been selected as one of the states. Do you have any publications relative to the organization of higher education in your state? If not, perhaps you could tell me somewhat in detail how it is organized.

I am especially concerned with the relationships existing between your universities, state colleges, and public junior colleges. I am aware of the fact that your state has not done much with the public junior colleges, but perhaps you could tell me what is being planned for this institution in your state. I will appreciate any information you can furnish me.

Dear Professor Lichte:

In response to your inquiry of July 20, one might say Indiana is one of several states which have no formal or statutory centralized organization of higher education at the state level; yet Indiana has one of the most effectively coordinated statewide systems to be found anywhere, because of the very close voluntary cooperation among its four state universities.

Under separate cover I am sending you a complimentary copy of my 1965 booklet, Freedom and Repression in Higher Education, which contains a very brief description of Indiana on pages 25-30, and some sketches of other states which may be of interest to you.

My 1961 booklet, Voluntary Statewide Coordination in Public Higher Education (1961, University of Michigan) is out of print and I can't send you a copy, but possibly you can find one in your university library or president's office. If so, it contains a chapter which carries a somewhat longer and more technical description of Indiana's system.

Indiana has four state universities, each with its own board of trustees, and no statewide central board. For about 15 years the four universities have worked continuously on comparable unit cost studies, and have presented to the governor and his director of administration and finance (budget director) a combined biennial request for appropriations of state tax funds, signed jointly by the four presidents. There has been and is, I think, an unusually high degree of public confidence in the fiscal management of the universities and in their general excellence.

Besides the four universities, there are some 12 regional campuses, about 7 of which appertain to Indiana U, and five to Purdue. In two instances both universities have a regional campus in the same city. At Fort Wayne the two operated for several years in close physical proximity, and last Fall a large new building located on a spacious campus was dedicated to house both of them under the same roof. The land and building were provided with locally-raised funds, at no tax cost to the state. The boards of trustees of Indiana U and of Purdue have a joint committee on the development of regional campuses. The regional campuses in the same four of the larger cities are just about now in process of becoming four-year institutions, because the local demand justifies it and makes it imperative.

Of course there is a great deal more to be told, but I'm afraid I do not have time to write a dissertation for you. If you would care to visit me, or other informed persons on this campus or at Purdue or any of the other campuses, I would be glad to welcome you and try to give you the picture in more detail.

Sincerely yours,

Gentlemen:

Today I am accepting, as offered in a letter of August 23 from Dean of the Faculty Claude M. Dillinger, a temporary part-time appointment which calls for my presence on your campus one week of each month during the ensuing academic year.

Dean Dillinger advises me that I should sign the loyalty affidavit, and complete an employee's withholding exemption certificate in the Business Office "immediately upon coming to the campus."

My first week on your campus will be September 26-30. If satisfactory, I will appear at your office September 26 to sign the documents. You may prefer, however, to mail me the documents and allow me to sign them (and notarize them if necessary) and return them to you by mail. Either method is satisfactory to me.

Sincerely yours,

Acting Dean Philip Peak
School of Education
Indiana University

Dear Dean Peak:

With the knowledge and approval of President Elvis J. Stahr, I have accepted an arrangement at Illinois State University which will take me away from the Indiana University campus one week of each month: September 26-30; October 17-21; October 31-November 4; December 5-9; January 9-13; February 13-17; March 13-17; April 10-14; and May 15-19.

Here on the IU campus I am scheduled to teach C 670 on Thursdays at 2:30 to 4:10. I will be able to be present at the first meeting of that class on September 22, and others except the five which fall within the periods noted in the foregoing paragraph.

It may be possible to make up for the one meeting each month by simply extending the period from 4:10 to 4:50, if that can be done without inconvenience to any student; but if not, it would be possible, I am sure, to find on the campus a competent and willing substitute for me for each of the meetings I will miss. If it meets with your approval, I will take full responsibility for seeing that the course and the class are properly conducted.

On most days except those indicated above, I will be at work on this campus, usually in my office in Education 328 B, and available to students at any time during the day, either informally or by appointment. Do these arrangements seem satisfactory to you?

Sincerely yours,

Dear Dean Billinger:

In response to your letter of August 23, I am happy to accept the proffered appointment, on the terms and conditions set forth therein.

I look forward to a most pleasant and mutually valuable experience on your campus one week each month, beginning with the week of September 26-30.

I shall follow your suggestion regarding the loyalty affidavit and the withholding exemption certificate.

Thank you for your hospitable memo of September 2, letting me know I am to be in the Administration Center, 406 Mulberry.

Monday morning, September 26, I plan to come to Schroeder 406 for a key card which will enable me to pick up a key as instructed.

I look forward with pleasure toward being with your advanced graduate students and professors one week in each month. I will try to fulfill as best I can all requests that may be made of me and all assignments that may be scheduled for me during those periods.

Dear Dr. Chambers:

I am extremely pleased that you are going to be working with us part-time during the coming year. With your permission, I will attempt to set up a schedule for the week of September 26-30, which will orient you to our educational administration personnel and will give you some insight into the student research which is being done.

While you are on campus that week, I will schedule considerable time for me to discuss our total program with you. On the occasion of your first week here, we will discuss in detail the kinds of schedules which you would like to follow in future weeks with us.

I have arranged for you to occupy the office which I identified as my former office when you were here, at least during the months prior to the election here in the state when we will know whether or not Dr. Prince will return to us. If there is any information which I can furnish to you, please let me know.

Dear Dr. Edwards:

Looking forward toward spending the week of September 26-30 at your University, it occurs to me I would like to ask one small favor, unless it should turn out to be inconvenient for you. I would like to request that in or near my office, if possible, a telephone with an amplifier be installed. This is usually an instrument like any other telephone except that there is a small rotary button on the handset, with which one can turn up the volume. I believe such instruments are generally available at a very nominal extra rental (perhaps $1.50 a month or thereabouts).

While I do not anticipate initiating any long-distance calls, I do expect to receive one occasionally from persons who want to ask me for information of the type I keep abreast of, and also occasionally from persons who want me for speaking engagements or consulting services. I have found that with the simple type of amplified phone I never have the slightest difficulty in coast-to-coast conversations, but without it there is sometimes some annoyance.

If the department head under whom I am to work will schedule all or several of the various duties it is desired that I perform during the week of September 26-30, and send me a copy of the schedule a few days in advance, this might be of some value by enabling me to bring along with me some pertinent materials. This is probably desirable, though by no means absolutely necessary.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Professor Hubbard:

Thank you for your hospitable letter of September 13. I am glad you will schedule my activities for the week of September 26-30.

I will be happy to plunge right into any seminars or colloquia, for advanced students or staff members, which you may set up for me. Currently I will be offering a course here for advanced graduate students on Financing Higher Education.

As I believe you know, I keep quite well up to date on the Legal Aspects of Higher Education. In fact, I am just now completing a 200-page book on the cases of the past four years.

In the field of elementary and secondary educational administration, probably my forte would be in national, state, and city school administration and financing, and such other aspects of the field as are most closely related to government and public administration. I think I will enjoy working individually with some of your doctoral candidates, as well as conferring with your staff members.

Do not hesitate to give me plenty to do during my week with you. As you say, after we have had some chance to confer, I will have a better notion of what is desired. Anything I have mentioned above is only very tentative, for the reason that I am not yet well informed of your wishes. I am confident that I can adapt to your needs, and I look forward with pleasure toward the week of September 26-30.

Dear Dr. Chambers:

In addition to the comments of Dr. Prince, I would like to add both the plaudits of Illinois State University as well as my own personal comments about your service here this year. You are just exactly the kind of person whom we were looking for last summer, who had sufficient experience that he could "look over the shoulder" of our new Department of Educational Administration to see that our Doctoral work was meeting generally accepted standards. You have not only done this well professionally, as we knew you would, but you have endeared yourself to our department for the way in which it was done. We can only say a very hearty "thank you" for all you have done for us.

We do hope that you will keep in touch with us for we feel that you are one of us, having committed so much of yourself to the development of this new program.

With warm personal regards, I am,

Your kind letter of May 31 is an item which I prize very highly.

My intermittent sojourns at Illinois State during the past academic year comprised a very pleasant experience throughout.

My admiration for the students and professors in the Department of Educational Administration is very high; and the same is true of my appraisal of the entire university, to the limited extent that I could gain informal impressions.

One of my pet enthusiasms is for the type of developing multi-purpose state university that has exploded the chrysalis of the teachers college, with all its implicit limitations, and is swiftly becoming a real comprehensive and cosmopolitan university. Dear Dr. Chambers:

Two new books -- "The Colleges and the Courts Since 1950" and also the 1962-1966 volume are resting behind me on my book shelf. They serve to remind me that we have not communicated recently, and your last letter back in July indicated that you were deeply preoccupied with the completion of a new book on financing higher education. I wonder if you have completed this work by now. If so, I would be very interested in seeing it because we are now entering an era with Illinois Wesleyan where finances are going to be crucial.

These books of yours also serve to remind me that it is now 1968 and we have had some discourse about the possibility of collaboration on a continuing basis keeping these splendid works up to date. My review of the correspondence indicates you have maintained an arms-length of this proposition, however, I hope your arm is either getting tired or shorter.

I hope that you had a pleasant holiday season and are approaching the challenges of 1968 with the same amount of vigor that you have had heretofore.

Sincerely,

WMG/b
Dear M.M.,

I am writing a report for the Illinois Board of Higher Education concerning a proposal that a new, full-scale university be established at the site of the National Accelerator Laboratory. My Committee wants to encourage the State of Illinois to carry its disproportionate burden in the field of higher education. A draft of this section reads as follows: "In the field of publicly sponsored education, Illinois historically has been an expenter of students and has devoted what the Committee feels is a comparatively modest proportion of its per capita resources in support of its existing institutions. While the absolute magnitude of its expenditures for higher education has been large, by comparative standards the financial burden borne by its people has not been excessive." Is this reasonably accurate? I would really appreciate your telling me whether the State does indeed spend 4% of per capita expenditure.

This note is written from Kalamazoo where I am attending a several committee meeting for regional campuses. I drove down from Chicago this morning and will go home to New Albany tonight. Last night I had a delightful dinner with Ann & Claire Freise in Chicago. I like Ann.
Things are going very well from this year, as I hope they are for you. We miss our many friends in Greece but are making new ones in Southern Africa. Please give my greetings to your colleagues and accept my heartfelt thanks for your help.

Sincerely,

Dear Dr. Braden:

It is good to have your note of April 3, written from a conference.

I believe the statement you quote can be said to be "reasonably" correct. For example I quote briefly from page 174 of my 1970 book, Higher Education in the Fifty States:

"In state tax appropriations for annual operating expenses of higher education in 1963, the position of Illinois among the states can be glimpsed from three simple measures:

(1) by magnitude of the total appropriations, Illinois ranked third (after California and New York);

(2) by average state tax cost per citizen, it ranked twenty-first, with 427.50; and

(3) by ratio of state tax cost to total personal income, it ranked thirty-eighth (with state tax cost only 0.69 per cent of total personal income)."

The bite into personal income was less than it was in three-fourths of the other states. Illinois has been doing moderately well in state tax support of higher education, but without question it has the resources to enable it to do much better.

I am an expansionist in public higher education, and I can easily become enthusiastic about a new full-scale university at the site of the National Accelerator Laboratory. In my opinion, it is practically impossible to provide enough higher education facilities soon enough in a huge megalopolis such as the Chicago area.

Enclosed are a couple of tabulations which will amplify a bit what I have said above. I hope this is useful to you.

All good wishes,
Professor Merritt M. Chambers

Upon seeing the November 10, 1975 issue of The Chronicle of Higher Education, I find myself once again impressed with the quantity and quality of the work which you do. Illinois State University and the Department of Educational Administration are indeed fortunate to have your services. It is so easy for each of us to accept your work as granted because you do it so consistently and in such an unobtrusive way. Although I occasionally fall into this trap, I do want you to know that I frequently stand in awe of the tremendous amount that you accomplish in your work as a teacher and researcher.

Thank you for the copy of your new book - Keep Higher Education Moving. I had, for the first time since I received it last week, a few minutes in a quiet office to open it, read your preface, scan the book, and realized it is one I wish to spend more time with. It is the kind of book I would like to do in a few years. I have many papers and articles I have written that I would like to see in book form. You might be able to help me with this sometime.

Dear Dr. Chambers:

I appreciated very much the information pertaining to the five most populous states which you included in your April, 1981 issue of Grapevine.

As an administrator in the public sector in Illinois, the information is particularly informative and helpful in dealing with various internal and external constituencies.

I want to thank you for the great service that you provide for American higher education with your Grapevine publication. I know that thousands of people across the country and in other nations as well rely upon your data and narrative as important factors in their educational decision making.

I also want to commend you for the variety of scholarly publications and educational data which you provide for a number of publications and agencies. Your wisdom, sage advice, and timely data are a valuable resource for many of us. I was pleased to see the Chronicle of Higher Education give you much overdue credit for your work in the field of Higher Education in one of its issues earlier this year.

We are pleased and proud to have you associated with Illinois State University. I consider it a special honor to have had you as a member of my doctoral dissertation committee at Indiana University.

Best wishes for good health and continued success in the future.

March 28, 1984

TO: President, Illinois State University

It is a pleasure to respond briefly to your memo of March 14.

A university must accept diversity in the views pressed upon it, and they will change as time passes. ISU may become increasingly more than a residential institution, and have more and more commuting students and classes off-campus while maintaining and increasing its resident enrollment. Increasing numbers of women, Blacks, other ethnic and national minorities, and persons above the conventional college age, and financially deprived persons may increase enrollments.

Historically the single-purpose normal schools served a necessary purpose in their day, but now the name "normal" has disappeared from the national map. Many of them have become multi-purpose state universities. There is very widespread recognition that teachers should have their education in the cosmopolitan atmosphere of universities, not in a narrow exclusive enclave. Additional public universities will be needed as universal higher education is approached.

"University" connotes an academic community intended to be permanent in the sense of centuries or millenia; comprehensive in the sense that it may include all fields of instruction and research; and cosmopolitan in the sense that it welcomes as students and teachers, in addition to its own locals and nationals, qualified persons from any part of the world; any race, any sex, any religion, any politics. "No university can be all things to all people"; true, but there is an obligation to think repeatedly about the range of opportunities of service open to ISU now and in its future ambience.

Broadly, ISU is regarded as a well-advanced multi-purpose university, with an outstanding history of excellence in education, and desirous of continuing and augmenting that repute. To define its ethos in greater detail is difficult, especially while preserving brevity, clarity, and inspirational quality; but progress in that direction can bolster institutional morale, and stimulate internal upgrading and external enthusiasm and support.

Among the motives for creating new and additional functions and programs for state universities are self-aggrandizement--individual and institutional--but there is a growing recognition that the main object is the betterment of all the people.

Great reluctance in considering heavy reduction or elimination of programs because of transient slowdowns in enrollment should be exercised, because such losses, if they turn out to be excessive in the future, are likely to be more difficult and expensive to replace or repair than they were to build up in a decade or longer period.

It may be best in the long run to allow the university's total mission to expand when possible, rather than to concentrate on a presumption of immobility or inevitable decline.

FROM: Lloyd Watkins
DATE: March 14, 1984

Recently the abbreviated version of the 1984-89 I.S.U. Academic Plan was sent to you. The Academic Plan is an important document at our University, and is thoroughly reviewed by the Academic Senate before it is approved by me and distributed. I hope that by now you have had an opportunity to study the abbreviated version.

The basic purposes of the Academic Plan are to set forth missions and goals, and to articulate the means by which those missions and goals are to be realized. The Plan moves from very general statements about the missions of the University and its colleges to very specific program review recommendations. This year the program review recommendations of the departments comprising the College of Arts and Sciences are featured. You will note that concerns vary from department to department, although recommendations concerning maintaining enrollments, revitalizing curricula, and increasing incentives for research and scholarship through changes in the ASPT system are mentioned with frequency. This diversity of concerns within one college is indicative of the pluralism characteristic of a large, multi-purpose university. As you read the mission statements developed by our colleges, you again will encounter diversity.

Despite this, many on the faculty and the staff believe that I.S.U. would benefit by developing a more defined concept of its own ethos or essential character, and of its future directions. I confess that I yearn to articulate a succinct statement of our essential nature, and that I have been frustrated by the static condition of Illinois higher education in recent years, created by a long period of economic recession. Perhaps you can help as we try to define our mission and articulate our future more precisely. Before I ask for your help, however, allow me to enumerate some factors which I believe must be considered.

First, our location, while a good one for maintaining enrollments, has been used as an excuse for limiting our initiatives. We are very close to the University of Illinois, the "flagship" university in the state system, and we also are located near several private institutions, some of which have professional schools. Securing approval and funding for programming which is in direct competition with that available within an hour's drive is highly unlikely.

Second, we are a large, residential university; almost ninety percent of our students are undergraduates, and more than ninety-five percent of them are residents of Illinois.
Third, while the financial picture of the State of Illinois appears to be improving, economic recovery in Illinois is slow. There is no reason to believe that funding for our state universities will improve markedly in the near future.

Fourth, there is, however, reason to believe that the "mix" of students at I.S.U. will change, as older people seek to keep pace with societal change and as the numbers of those being graduated from high schools in Illinois decrease.

These are factors which limit and shape not only what we are, but what we can become.

As I have thought about these things, several questions keep recurring. First, can a university with a variety of programs, ranging from the very practical to the highly theoretical, find relevant commonalities? Second, should we expend our energies attempting to become a smaller, less affluent version of the University of Illinois? Third, should we emphasize the basic undergraduate nature of our endeavors, perhaps in the process inadvertently making a negative statement about our graduate and research missions, missions which enrich our university community far beyond the size of our efforts in these areas? Fourth, why are we concerned about this matter at all? Should we just relax and accept the diversity so clearly depicted in the Academic Plan?

There have been many serious discussions about mission and direction by administrators, faculty and staff during recent years. While we have sharpened our views to some extent, nothing definitive has evolved. Perhaps it cannot, but I would welcome your views. If, after reading the abbreviated version of the Academic Plan (or the full version if you wish!) and after reviewing this letter, you wish to send me your comments, they would be welcomed. I ask only that you:

1. Consider all aspects of Illinois State University, not just your own area;
2. That you keep your comments as brief as possible, in order that I may deal with a volume of comments within a reasonable period of time;
3. Send me your comments by May 1, 1984;
4. That you sign your comments. I long ago stopped reading anonymous letters.

I do not know where this will lead us, but I believe we need to make this effort to "know ourselves."
